PREFACE

In hayzer oreme iz do azoy fil sheynkayt ...
In poor homes there is so much beauty ...

Mani Leib could have completed this opening line of his poem, "In hayzer oreme", with any number of subject nouns. Many another Yiddish poet would have written, "In poor homes there is so much wisdom," reminding us that learning is the primary value of Jewish culture, and Solomonic wisdom its highest ideal. Around the turn of the last century, the sweatshop poets of the Lower East Side of New York might have written, "In poor homes there is so much suffering," or, alternately, "so much kindness," pricking our social conscience, and waking us to human responsibilities. A poet of neo-romantic or neo-Hasidic bent, extending Rabbi Nahman of Bratslav's war against despair, might have exulted, "In poor homes there is so much joy," or "so much song." Mani Leib recognized sheynkayt—beauty—whose spirit of generous refinement he evokes in the rest of the poem.

This line of Mani Leib's came to life for me one autumn day, about 1980, when I entered the small Bronx apartment of the late Joe Fishstein. The place was being readied for a move, and most of the furniture was already gone. But around the room, on white bookshelves, stood a library such as I had never seen. The walls sparkled, quite literally, with bright bindings, as almost each book had been provided with an extra decorative covering, and shone on the shelves like a bedecked bride. Mrs. Fishstein explained to me that her husband had fashioned all these covers by hand. Even before approaching the shelves, I felt that I had stumbled upon a treasure trove: Joe Fishstein had wanted his books to look as precious as they felt to him, so that their beauty should be palpable, the way they were in the great leather libraries of yore. He had transformed the modest room into a happy shrine.

I felt blessed to be there. Some days earlier my good friend Neal Kozodoy, then associate editor of Commentary magazine, had asked me whether I would be interested in seeing a collection of Yiddish poetry books that a family in the Bronx was prepared to donate to a university library. He had been told that several local universities had already turned down the offer, and wondered whether I might want to acquire the collection for McGill. To be honest, I might not have responded with any enthusiasm myself. From the moment I began teaching Yiddish literature at McGill University in 1969, people had been offering me Yiddish libraries for sale or donation. In Canada as in the United States, the children of avid Yiddish readers rarely inherited their parents' knowledge of the language, hence had no use for books in what had become a foreign tongue. At first, I had responded to every such invitation, but once the basic Yiddish library had been established at McGill, and once I had discovered that most of the homes I visited had a variation of the same collection, I either sent my students on these calls, or politely declined the offers. It goes without saying that when one of my students, Aaron Lansky, began systematically collecting books for what soon became the National Yiddish Book Center, I gave him every encouragement to pursue his important rescue operation.

What made me go out to the Bronx that day was the mention of "Yiddish poetry books." I was then writing a book about American Yiddish poetry and I wondered what had appealed to a reader of Yiddish poetry in the Bronx. Then, too, a reader specializing in poetry might have assembled something quite different from an amateur's home library. But I had never imagined a collection like Joe Fishstein's. This sewing machine operator and life-long member of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union had put in a standing order with a Yiddish bookstore for every new poetry title published anywhere in the world, and for any book or journal about Yiddish verse. He had made weekly pilgrimages to the bookstores, and on Saturdays, with what feels very much like transferred religious awe, he had spent the mornings reading, decorating his acquisitions, and copying his favourite poems into a private album. Needless to say, he had done everything possible to protect the books so that when they eventually came to McGill, they were in vintage condition.

The sense of sanctity still permeated his home. When I expressed my interest in the collection and began explaining to Mrs. Fishstein that I was not authorized to make her any financial commitment, she bridled and said that she would never accept any money for her husband's books. She only wanted them to be cared for with the same respect they had enjoyed in their home. Matters were not quite so simple for Fishstein's daughters whose affection for their father was mixed with a smidgen of resentment at the care he had showered on these objects; he had not invited his children to share in his pleasure, perhaps anticipating that they could not. But they, too, were generous in their desire to win appreciation for their father's legacy. If he had not involved them in his enthusiasm, he had certainly taught them to honour it.

Preface

I was not surprised to discover from Fishstein's private album—the only book that remained in the family's possession—that Mani Leib was one of his favourite poets. Mani Leib (Brahinski; born 1883 in Ukraine, died 1953, New York) had arrived in America in 1905, not long before Fishstein himself had immigrated. He was a leading figure in the group of American Yiddish poets known as Di Yunge (The Young), known for the delicacy of their verse, for their emphasis on quietude and harmony and sensibility in the face of life's exigent demands. The immigrant community into which they had come was noisy and crowded. Mani Leib worked most of his life as a skilled craftsman in shoe factories, making the leather uppers of boots, just as Fishstein laboured over a sewing machine. These men had families to support; they were harried and worn. Poetry was alchemy, transforming the commonplace into the precious, extracting the timeless from the ephemeral. Poetry was the experience of a private self in the midst of the public marketplace. They thought of poetry as secular, but both Mani Leib's poetry and Joe Fishstein's approach to poetry bear the traces of the religious tradition in which they had been raised.

Beauty is no abstraction in Mani Leib's verse but manifest in melodious sound and supple image. So, too, the library of Joe Fishstein makes manifest a man's love of poetry and the place it held in his life. This collection not only enriches McGill's holdings in the field of Yiddish poetry, but lets us feel how Yiddish poetry was experienced at the moment and in the place where it was being created. In later years, the Yiddish poetess Kadya Molodovsky would edit a literary journal in New York called Svive (Milieu). The collection of Joe Fishstein evokes the svive, the atmosphere, of Yiddish poetry in one of its finest hours.

INTRODUCTION

The Collection

The Joe Fishstein Collection of Yiddish Poetry, presented to McGill University in 1981 by the family of the late Joe Fishstein of the Bronx, New York, consists of about 2300 volumes in Yiddish, mostly poetry. McGill University was chosen as the recipient of this extraordinary gift in recognition of the intensive Yiddish language and literature courses offered by its Jewish Studies Department. Dr. Ruth R. Wisse, presently Professor of Yiddish Literature in the Department of Near Eastern Languages and Civilizations at Harvard University, and Adjunct Professor in the Department of Jewish Studies at McGill University, was instrumental in acquiring the Collection for McGill.

In the words of Zachary M. Baker, "The Fishstein Collection represents one of the finest single private libraries of Yiddish literature to be found anywhere ... What sets it apart is both its sheer size and the large number of rare or ephemeral items found in only a few libraries anywhere in the world"¹.

The Collection contains both rare and standard works of well-known authors, generally in superb condition. Fishstein had established standing orders for Yiddish poetry from publishers all over the world, which included many limited, ephemeral editions. Most of the books were published in Poland and the United States, especially New York City, but there are also imprints from Argentina, Australia, Austria, Belgium, Belorussia, Brazil, Canada, China, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, England, France, Germany, Hungary, Israel, Italy, Lithuania, Mexico, Romania, Russia, South Africa, the Ukraine and Uruguay. There are a number of unusual imprints produced outside the Pale of Settlement (the area in czarist Russia in which Jews were allowed to settle), like St. Petersburg [#1061], Smolensk [#966], and Libau, Latvia [#1485]².

²The symbol # preceding a number refers to the entry number. Such numbers should not be confused with dates referring to bibliographic references at the end of this Introduction.

Fishstein Collection

Although the publications stem from far-flung locations, and may manifest local variations, they are united linguistically and culturally as the expression of a single people with a common history and sense of identity. There was frequent contact among authors, publishers and readers between different settlements. This was effected through mail, telegraph and sometimes by travel, and through the medium of the press and periodical literature.

Of particular importance is the presence in the Collection of a large number of pre-World War II imprints from the former Soviet Union and other parts of Eastern Europe. Yiddish books printed in pre-war Poland, Russia, Romania and the Baltic States were often destroyed during the Holocaust and are scarce or rare today. The Collection also contains complete runs of important Yiddish literary periodicals. Of interest to Canadian readers in particular will be the Yiddish books and journals printed in Montreal and elsewhere in Canada.

Graphic art was a prominent element in the production of many of the books, and the work of more than 400 illustrators may be found throughout the collection, including many of international renown, like Marc Chagall and El Lissitzky. Several binders of ephemeral and archival materials of the period, both Jewish and non-Jewish, are included in the legacy and offer opportunities for historical and sociological research.

The Joe Fishstein Collection of Yiddish Poetry, although remarkable in several ways, is not comprehensive. Indeed, the Yiddish collection in McGill's Humanities and Social Sciences Library houses works not included in the Fishstein Collection, as does the larger Yiddish collection at the Montreal Jewish Public Library. The Fishstein gift is eclipsed in size by the more comprehensive holdings of the YIVO Institute of Jewish Research in New York, and other great academic and special research libraries of the world, as it is by the sheer quantity of assembled titles at the National Yiddish Book Center in Amherst, Massachusetts. Nevertheless, the Fishstein Collection is unique. Its importance lies chiefly in the fact that it contains a surprising number of works seldom found elsewhere, and that most of its volumes have been preserved in vintage condition.

Introduction

The Historical Background

The late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries were a time of intellectual ferment, flux and physical upheaval for Jews in Eastern Europe. Religious orthodoxy was still strong, but not monolithic. In addition to the rationalist Misnagdik stream, stressing erudition and study, there was popular mystical Hasidism, which spoke joyfully—in Yiddish—to the heart of the common man. The ethical Mussar movement of Israel Salanter had also won adherents. Moreover, cross currents of new secular ideas and ideals were challenging the young: Haskalah (Enlightenment), with its beckoning windows to the knowledge and culture of the Western world, the Bund and other forms of socialism, Zionism, and various combinations of these ideologies.

All this intellectual ferment was taking place against a background of shtetl (townlet) poverty, economic persecution, dislocation, and recurrent pogroms under the czarist regime. In the New World, wave upon wave of immigrants poured onto American shores, where new traumas of exploitation and grinding urban poverty frequently awaited.

Such was the turbulent but fertile soil out of which new shoots in Jewish creativity were to sprout in the arts and in literature, including Yiddish poetry. It was as if these currents and upheavals aerated and nurtured the roots of creative expression in the Yiddish speaking world.

Joe Fishstein and His Milieu

This was the historical setting of Joe Fishstein, an East European immigrant who arrived on the shores of New York as a young man in 1910. He was born in 1891 in the town of Kalarash, Bessarabia (presently in the Republic of Moldova), which was "cleansed" of Jews by the Nazis during World War II. (A large yizker [memorial] book, to which Fishstein contributed, entitled Sefer Kalarash [#2155], stands on a shelf in the Collection, beautifully adorned and boxed, next to several other copies of the work.) He married Lillie Deutsch in 1912 and had two daughters, Ruth and Clara, and five grandchildren. He was a sewing machine operator in the garment industry most of his life and an active member of Local 66 of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union. He was a worker of modest means, largely self-taught, with a passion for poetry—not a typical portrait of a literary benefactor.

Fishstein Collection

Fishstein's love for, and appreciation of, Yiddish poetry is evident from the condition of his library. He treated his books with great care, and fashioned beautiful protective dust jackets and boxes for them, with a natural eye for pleasing design. And he read them, as witnessed by the dozens of bookmarks scattered among the pages—often beautifully hand-made from scraps of textiles—and by the strategic placement of abundant clippings of book reviews, poems, authors' portraits, and other items. He copied his favourite poems by hand into a special, decorated notebook. Another thick notebook is devoted to a handwritten catalogue of a large portion of his collection.

Joe Fishstein was indeed an unusual man. But so were his background and cultural milieu. The early decades of the twentieth century provided a setting in which many thousands of Yiddish speaking immigrants, including hundreds of poets and other writers, laboured long hours in garment industry sweatshops and in other trades, with little enough time and energy left to write. But the immigrants were thirsty for education, attended cultural evenings and thronged to the Yiddish theatre. They were avid readers of the prolific Yiddish press, which acted as an instrument of education and acculturation to its many thousands of readers. The newspapers included poetry, serialized works of fiction by prominent authors, and literary criticism along with news and other features.

In World of our Fathers, Irving Howe speaks eloquently of the emergence of a new social type—"the self-educated worker" (1976, p.244-249)—"who would become the carrier, and often the pride, of Yiddish culture ... still bearing the benchmarks of the Talmud Torah, ... yet fired by a vision of a universal humanist culture" (p.22). The idealistic concerns and goals of the Jewish Labour Movement played a central role at that time in inspiring many young Yiddish writers and readers of the newly-formed Jewish working class.

The socialist daily newspaper, Forverts (Forward), was founded in 1897 and edited for almost 50 years by Abraham Cahan. The Jewish trade unions and associations, like the still active Arbeter ring (Workmen's Circle), fostered education and a number of them sponsored or published books of poetry and fiction. The funeral of Sholem Aleichem in New York City in 1916 was attended by hundreds of thousands of his grief-stricken readers. Jewish shops were closed throughout New York City, as workers escorted their beloved author to his final resting place. [Cf. #1085]

Introduction

The Yiddish Language

Yiddish, the mam'e loshn (mother tongue) of the East European Jewish immigrants, is a "diaspora language", one of sixteen or more such languages created in the various lands of the Jewish dispersion (Goldsmith, 1976, p.27). A diaspora language is written in Hebrew characters, with which most Jews were familiar, and was created to meet the special needs of their particular way of life. It formed a kind of linguistic bridge between the vernacular of the host country and the revered Hebrew-Aramaic of the Bible and Talmud, which was reserved primarily for prayer and scholarship. Some other examples of diaspora languages are Judeo-Arabic, Judeo-Spanish (Judezmo or Ladino) and Judeo-Persian.

Yiddish, the creation of the Ashkenazi Jews, was the most widespread and generative of all the diaspora languages. The word, Yidish, means "Jewish" in the language itself. In 1939 there were an estimated eleven million Yiddish speakers in the world, comprising 65 to 70 percent of the world Jewish population (Weinreich, 1971, col.789). In 1915 the Yiddish press of New York City alone had five daily newspapers with an approximate circulation of 525,690 (Soltes, 1950, p.24), and the world Yiddish periodical literature in 1939 amounted to more than 400 publications (YIVO, 1946, p.9).

Yiddish is generally thought to have originated about a thousand years ago in the upper and middle Rhine basin. It is believed that the Jews who lived there fused elements of old French and old Italian with various dialects of medieval German, and interlaced them with the Hebrew or Hebrew-Aramaic of the liturgy and of biblical and rabbinic study, which permeated so much of their lives. As Yiddish-speakers migrated through Central and Eastern Europe, the language continued to grow and transform itself, incorporating elements of Slavic and other tongues along the way. A fusion language, that absorbed and adapted words from other languages, Yiddish developed into a unique, fluid, zesty tongue which was an expression of the Ashkenazi way of life, of Jewish ethics and values.

The status of the language, as the twentieth century approached, was still considered suspect by many intellectuals, who often considered it the jargon of the common people. Advocates of various ideologies, whether they were propounding the virtues of Haskalah, Zionism, or Bundist socialism, originally preferred to communicate their messages in established languages like German and Russian, or—in the case of the first two movements—in the respected but not yet colloquial modern Hebrew. It was soon realized, however, that to reach the people, one would have to speak to them in their own familiar, intimate Yiddish. The non-Zionist sections of the Jewish Labour Movement, in particular, came to regard Yiddish as an asset of intrinsic cultural value.

Yiddish was standardized from several fluid dialects and transformed into a modern literary tongue in the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. Perhaps more than any other single factor, the Yiddish periodical Kol mevaser (1862-1871) contributed to the standardization of Yiddish orthography and the refinement of modern Yiddish literary diction. The earliest work of the Zeyde (Grandfather) of modern Yiddish literature, Mendele Mokher Sefarim³ (1835-1917), appeared in its pages. (The name, which means "Mendele the Book Peddler", is the pseudonym of Sholem Yankev Abramovitch [Romanized].)

The work of Mendele, along with that of the other two klasiker (classic writers, or "Fathers") of modern Yiddish literature—Isaac Leib Peretz (1852 or 1853-1915) and Sholem Aleichem (1859-1916)—was critical in the forging of literary Yiddish. ("Sholem aleykhem", a Hebrew-Yiddish form of greeting, which means literally, "Peace be upon you", is the pseudonym of Sholem Rabinovitch [Romanized].) The process of literary honing continued through the appearance of two landmark publications: the Yidishe folks-bibliotek (Jewish People's Library) (1888-1889), edited by Sholem Aleichem in two anthologies, and the literary annual, Hoyz-fraynd (House-friend) (1888-1896), edited by Mordecai Spector.

³The spelling of the author's name given here is that of the "name heading" assigned to him by the Library of Congress (LC). Like all LC name headings, its form has been determined in accordance with a hierarchy of rules, and generally reflects usage in English language reference sources. It is the form adopted in the access points of a cataloguing entry, and hence in the generated indices. The systematically Romanized form of the name, as transcribed from the title page of a work, is usually found in the body of an entry. For example, in entry #1078, the beginning of the title page is transcribed: "Der leydikgeyer / [fun] Sholem-Aleykhem", a spelling which differs from the Library of Congress version of the name heading, "Sholem Aleichem". The Yiddish reader is urged to consult the Table of Name Equivalents to locate the Roman alphabet LC version of a name generally used in the Indices.

Introduction

The first Czernowitz Yiddish Language Conference was held in that city in 1908 to address the role of Yiddish in Jewish life, and to mark its national significance. The conference formed a milestone in the history of Yiddish. Attended by leading Jewish literary and cultural figures of the time, and representing all shades of Jewish opinion, the conference did much to bolster and galvanize the acceptance of Yiddish as a literary language.

It is interesting that many of the early modern literary figures were bilingual—in Yiddish and Hebrew—and sometimes trilingual—in Russian or Polish as well. For most writers, embracing Yiddish as a mode of creative expression did not mean abandoning Hebrew. The noted Yiddish literary critic, Samuel Niger, like his predecessor, Baal-Makhshoves, speaks of the tsveyshprakhikeyt (bilingualism) of Jewish literature—one literature expressing itself in two languages at various times in history, and most notably in Hebrew and Yiddish [1705; 1706]. Mendele is considered to be the "Grandfather" of both modern Hebrew and Yiddish Literatures. Sholem Aleichem and Isaac Leib Peretz deliberately chose to write in Yiddish even though their work was first published in Hebrew and Russian. Authors would sometimes translate, or rather recreate, their own works into Hebrew from Yiddish or vice versa. Outstanding poets, like Hayyim Nahman Bialik and Uri Zvi Greenberg, were productive in both Yiddish and Hebrew. The distinguished Hebrew writer, Micah Joseph Berdichevsky, and the Israeli Nobel laureate, Shmuel Yosef Agnon, also wrote in Yiddish.

Soviet Orthography

Standard Yiddish incorporates many Hebraisms— Hebrew words that have retained their original Hebrew, unvocalized spelling, but which are pronounced differently than they are in the source language. Shortly after the revolution in the former Soviet Union, publications in the Hebrew language were banned, as Hebrew was identified with religion, Zionism, and "bourgeois exploitation". An official Yiddish Soviet orthography was adopted, in which all Yiddish words were to be spelled phonetically, obscuring their Hebrew derivation. Certain Hebrew letters, like hes and sof, were eliminated, and often special forms for some final consonants were abandoned, in so-called conformity with the linguistic practice of other languages.

There are many examples of books with various degrees of Soviet orthography in the Fishstein Collection. The spelling looks strange to a reader of standard Yiddish; nevertheless, it is readable. The reverse, however, is not true. It is highly improbable that a Yiddish reader brought up in the Soviet Union would recognize Yiddish words containing Hebraisms that have retained their Hebrew spelling. Since the arrival of glasnost, Yiddish publications printed outside the former Soviet Union have become available there, and standard Yiddish is being reintroduced into new Russian imprints by the addition of the phonetic spelling after Hebraisms. According to an article in the WJC International Report, the World Jewish Congress is sponsoring a project which may facilitate this process electronically (WJC, 1995, p.6).

The Flowering of Yiddish Literature

Overview

The period ushered in by the klasiker, and lasting roughly until the outbreak of World War II, is commonly referred to as the flowering of modern Yiddish literature. It was a relatively brief period, lasting less than half a century, but teemed with concentrated creativity. The time is eloquently evoked in the Introduction to The Penguin Book of Modern Yiddish Verse:

Is there, we may wonder, another body of imaginative writing in the modern era quite so rapid and cramped in its internal development, quite so harried by the brutal pressures of modern history, quite so bloodied at its point of fulfillment? All the literary tendencies and impulses which in other, more fortunate literatures take centuries to unfold in leisurely and organic rhythms are in Yiddish pressed into decades, sometimes merely a few years. There is a dizzying speed of motion within Yiddish literary life, from school to school, subject to subject, style to style. But there is also a deep and finally unbreakable continuity with the Yiddish cultural past and, perhaps less visibly but at least as deeply, with the whole tradition of Jewish life, thought and writing, stretching by now across thousands of years (Penguin, 1987, p.2).

Modern Yiddish poetry was frontierless. Creativity emanated from many centres—from cities like Vilna, Lodz, Warsaw, Berlin, Kiev, Moscow, Paris, New York, Chicago and Tel Aviv. There was so much interaction among them, and their common linguistic medium and cultural background were so strong, that their literary productions can be treated as parts of a single organic whole.

Introduction

Two important Yiddish literary periodicals made their appearance in the early years of the twentieth century, marking the emergence of modernistic trends in the Yiddish literary world: Di Yugend (Youth) in New York (1907) [#1682], and Literarishe monatshriften (Literary Monthly) in Vilna (1908). Among the distinguishing characteristics of the new poetry in these periodicals were qualities shared with modern European symbolism—individualism, aestheticism and eroticism, expressed in new verse forms and fluidity of language. This modernizing trend had a great impact on young poets on both sides of the Atlantic until World War I—poets such as Reuben Eisland, David Einhorn, Moshe Leib Halpern, David Hofstein, S.J. Imber, Mani Leib, Leib Najdus [Naydus], and Israel Jacob Schwartz.

After World War I, expressionism took hold in the three main Yiddish literary centres—Poland, the Soviet Union and the United States—in journals such as In zikh (Introspection) (New York, 1920-1939) [#1643], Shtrom (Stream) (Moscow, 1922-1924) [#1611], Khalyastre (Gang) (Warsaw, 1922; Paris, 1924) [#1585], and others. Poets of the new generation had experienced the destruction and turmoil of war, pogroms and revolution, and the disorientation of rootlessness in a big city. Feelings of despair and anger against the mores of conventional society erupted in their work, often manifested in a break with traditional metrical forms. At the same time, they also created poems of lyrical sensitivity, voicing their nostalgia for the old and yearning for new horizons. These characteristics paralleled those of post World War I contemporary world poetry, but with subject matter generally reflecting Jewish concerns, and with a wealth of imagery often drawn from Jewish tradition and history.

Poland

The well-spring of Yiddish literature was Poland. Its environs—Galicia, Romania, Bessarabia, Latvia, and especially Vilna, in Lithuania, contributed substantially to the pool of talent. The hub was Warsaw, where great numbers of young literati were inspired and sustained by the mentorship of Isaac Leib Peretz. Hundreds of writers and artists joined the emigrating throngs to America, but many remained, unaware of the deluge that was to engulf them.

A colourful, though typically shortlived, group made a startling appearance on the literary scene in the early 1920's. It was called the Khalyastre, a derogatory epithet meaning "gang", hurled at them by a critic in an influential Warsaw daily newspaper, which they gleefully adopted as their own. Under the triumvirate of Melech Ravitch, Peretz Markish and Uri Zvi Greenberg, the group adopted innovations of German expressionism and Russian futurism, and outraged public opinion with their explosive attempts at revolution of the spirit. After about a year, the leaders went their separate ways, literally and figuratively.

Yung Vilne was an important Yiddish literary group in Vilna in the 1930's, which published literary works, anthologies and periodicals, and whose members were also committed to political activism. They included the poets Abraham Sutzkever, Hirsch Glick, Chaim Grade, Szmerke Kaczerginski, Peretz Miransky, Elhonen Vogler, Leyzer Volf, and others. Although the group was destroyed by the Nazi Holocaust and the Soviet occupation, surviving members continued their literary activity around the world.

Soviet Union

The story of Soviet Yiddish literature between the two world wars is a tragic one. Most of the great literary figures, including the major poets, were severely harrassed; virtually none was to meet a natural death. The Soviet writers initially had the freedom to flourish, particularly in the early twenties, when many who had left after the revolution were encouraged to return. Before long, however, the Soviet government became suspicious of Jewish cultural institutions in general, and Yiddish writers in particular, and placed severe restrictions on their freedom of expression. The poets Izi Kharik, Moshe Kulbak, David Hofstein, Peretz Markish, Leib Kvitko, Itzik Fefer and Shmuel Halkin were among those to perish at the hands of Stalin and his confrères. The gifted prose writers David Bergelson, Der Nister and Shmuel Persov; the literary historian Israel Zinberg and the famous actor, Solomon Mikhailovich Mikhoëls, shared a similar fate. In 1948, many Yiddish writers and Jewish intellectuals were arrested, and on August 12, 1952, a large number of them were executed, or received severe prison terms. Soviet Yiddish literature had experienced a blow from which it was never to recover.

United States

Yiddish literature, particularly poetry, flourished in the United States. Morris Rosenfeld, whose work was translated into several languages, and some of which was set to music, was the most popular of the late nineteenth century proletarian poets, sharing as he did the poignant experience of the average exhausted immigrant worker. Among his contemporaries were Morris Winchevsky, David Edelstadt, Joseph Bovshover, and others.

Introduction

The modernist impulse in American Yiddish literature was first associated with the group known as Di Yunge (The Young Ones), who introduced the journal, Di Yugend [#1682] in 1907 and whose influence extended far beyond its actual membership. The poets most consistently associated with this group were Mani Leib, Zishe Landau and Reuben Eisland, along with the prose writers Joseph Opatoshu, David Ignatoff and Isaac Raboy.

In the early twenties, another modernist group produced the New York periodical entitled In zikh [#1643]. Members of the new group, the Inzikhistn, rebelled against their older colleagues, who they thought had been paying excessive attention to form and mellifluous language at the expense of content. Like the modernist English language poets, the Inzikhistn embraced more cosmopolitan, expressionist themes and experimented with free verse. Associated with this movement were three major poets—Jacob Glatstein, A. Leyeless and N.B. Minkoff.

Despite the significance and influence of such literary movements, however, the affiliation poets had with them was often transitory, as were the movements themselves. In the words of Chone Shmeruk: "The clear personal imprint which distinguishes most of the writers places Yiddish poetry in the United States ... above and beyond the limitations of any literary or ideological school with which they identified themselves at any particular time" (Shmeruk, 1971/72, col. 822). The work of the major poets, such as Moshe Leib Halpern, Mani Leib, H. Leivick, Itzik Manger, Abraham Reisen, Aaron Zeitlin, and others, resists categorization.

Canada

Most of Canadian Yiddish literary activity has emanated from Montreal or Toronto. Writers generally followed their individual paths, and were minimally influenced by the various trends that surfaced in Yiddish literary circles in the United States.

A dynamic Yiddish creative life existed—and still does to a large extent—in Montreal, often centering in the cultural hub created by the Jewish Public Library, an extraordinary institution founded in 1914 by the renowned writers, Reuben Brainin and Judah Kaufmann (Yehudah Even-Shemuel). The early poets and novelists, most of whom had emigrated from Europe between the world wars, included authors such as N. Y. Gotlib, Ish Ya'ir (Israel Stern), Ida Massey [Maz'e], Shabse Perl, Yakov Yitskhak Segal, M. M. Shaffir, Mirel Erdberg Shatan, A. Sh. Shkolnikoff, Esther Segal Shkolnikov, and Yaakov Zipper (who was also an educator). A large group of internationally known European Yiddish poets and prose writers joined them after World War II: writers such as Yehudah Elberg, Chaim Leib Fox [Fuks], Mordechai Hōsid [Hūsid], Rachel Korn, Miriam Krant, Melekh Ravitch, Joseph Rogel, and Chawa [Chava] Rozenfarb. Aaron Krishtalka, the youngest of the above, is one of the few born in Canada (Cf. Kanader Yidisher zamlbukh, 1982).

Other figures have enriched the Montreal and Toronto Yiddish cultural scene—editors, translators, journalists, educators and scholars—among them, Chaim Spilberg, Joseph Kage, Moshe Menchowsky, Shloime Wiseman, Samson [Shimshon] Dunsky, and Leib Tencer. Toronto has been the home of Yiddish literary figures such as Peretz Miransky (a member of the famous Yung Vilne group), S. Mitzmacher, S. Nepom, Simcha Simchovitch, and Yudika (Judith Tsik).

The Fishstein Collection includes a number of periodicals produced in Canada, particularly Montreal: Nyuansn (1921) [#1701], Der Kval (1922) [#1613], Kanad'e (1925) [#1863], Royerd (1921) [#1702], Montreol (1932) [#1652], Heftn (1936) [#1653], Kanader zshurnal (1940) [#1645], Tint un feder (1949) [#1670], Montreoler heftn (1955) [#1654], and others.

The Montreal-based Yiddish newspaper Keneder adler (Canadian Eagle) (1907-1988) was published first as a daily, then as a weekly. For a major part of its existence (1924-1964), Israel Rabinowitch was at its helm. Der Yidisher zshurnal (The Yiddish journal) was its Toronto counterpart. There have also been other weekly publications in Canadian cities.

The Yiddish theatre has enhanced the Montreal cultural scene under the leadership of such notable women as ChayeLe Grober in the earlier years and, after World War II, the indomitable Dora Wasserman, whose mantle has recently been passed to her daughter, Bryna.

Introduction

Israel

There was a vigorous antagonism to Yiddish language and literature in Erets Yisroel (The Land of Israel) prior to World War II, an attitude that was bitterly resented by many Yiddish-speakers at the time. As the major diaspora tongue of the Jewish people, Yiddish presented a threat to the establishment of Hebrew as a living language there, and was associated with "ghetto mentality". However, some Yiddish poetry was produced, notably by Yosef Papyernikov, and by Arie Shamri, Abraham Lev and I. Z. Shargel. In the wake of the Holocaust and after the establishment of the State of Israel, Yiddish literature had a renaissance of sorts there. Israel has since been the generator of most of the Yiddish literary production of the world. The work of the poetess Rukhl Fishman appeared at this time. Perhaps the most respected Yiddish poet in Israel and the world today is the gifted Abraham Sutzkever, a former member of Yung Vilne and founder-editor of the prestigious literary journal Di Goldene keyt in 1949 until its cessation in 1995.

Women Poets

Among the poets that flourished in the early decades many were women. The Fishstein Catalogue reveals evidence of the contribution made by such women years before feminism came into vogue. A perusal of the Author Index, bypassing names with initials only, reveals the presence of well over one hundred entries with women's forenames. Similarly, the forenames in the Illustrator Index reveal the presence of more than twenty women.

Perhaps the most prominent of the women poets was the talented and versatile poetess and editor, Kadya Molodowsky. A number of women poets have already been mentioned in the section on Canada; others include names such as: Ada Cohen, Hasye Cooperman, Celia Levin Dropkin, Devoyreh Fogel, Edith Glasser-Andrews (Ida Glazer), Bertha Kling, Bracha Kopstein, Malka Lee, Anna Margolin, Anita Piatigorska, Fradl Shtok, Esther Shumiatcher-Hirshbein, Malka Heifetz Tussman, Miriam Ulianofer, Shifra Weiss, Rashel Weprinsky, Rajzell Zychlinska (Reyzl Zshikhlinski), and others. The beautifully-executed anthology, Yidishe dikhterins (Yiddish Poetesses) [1812], edited by E. Korman and published in 1928, includes seventy women poets, along with portraits of many of them.

The Later Decades

During the thirties, the concerns of modernism and its adherence to aesthetic autonomy became increasingly peripheral to the Jewish world. Such attitudes did not sit well for any length of time even for Yiddish literary rebels, since social responsibility is embedded in Jewish culture, in Yidishkeyt. Moreover, the threatening spectre of the Nazi Holocaust loomed on the horizon, and was soon to descend on six million of their people. The lingering memory of that darkness was to penetrate the Jewish psyche, as it did the work of the remaining post-World War II Yiddish poets. Among these, the work of the New York Yiddish poet, Jacob Glatstein, stands out, as does that of Abraham Sutzkever.

The constellation of Yiddish poets, along with the vibrant Yiddish culture that nurtured it, is no more. The scythes of Nazi annihilation slashed across the millions of Yiddish speakers and readers in Europe during World War II, and Stalin's subsequent destruction of Soviet Yiddish creative endeavour added the coup de grâce. Ironically, in America, benign historical factors played their inexorable role as well, as the welcoming English-speaking environment beckoned. The creation of the State of Israel, the transformation of Hebrew from a classical language to a living tongue with a modern literature of its own, further deflected the need for a Jewish language rooted in the ghettos of the diaspora.

For those who wish to explore the delights of Yiddish poetry, and to savour the richness of the culture it embodied, the Joe Fishstein Collection of Yiddish Poetry presents a special opportunity. In editions which often look as if they have just come off the press, frequently protected by beautifully designed jackets that are a feast for the eyes, the Collection offers the reader the distillation of Yiddish poetry at its peak.

Yiddish Revival

The flowering time of Yiddish language and literature is past, and the rich soil and environment that nurtured their emergence is gone. However, Yiddish refuses to die. Individuals and organizations, though much-reduced in numbers, continue to sponsor creativity in Yiddish on a national and international level. It is still the living vernacular of Jewish ultra-orthodox communities in New York, Montreal and many other cities in North America, Israel and elsewhere. The language, as the bearer of Yidishkeyt, has some status for them, but it does not approach that of Hebrew, the holy tongue. Yiddish is not regarded by them as a literary language in its own right.

Introduction

The study of Yiddish language and literature has been undergoing a revival in the last few decades, both at the academic and grass roots levels. The YIVO Institute for Jewish Research in New York continues to function as an active worldwide resource for Yiddish scholarship. Courses have proliferated in university Jewish Studies programmes and centres all over the world, and several Chairs in Yiddish have been installed in Jewish Studies Departments. Aaron Lansky, a former Jewish Studies graduate student at McGill University, is the founder of the remarkable National Yiddish Book Center in Amherst, Massachusetts. The Center houses and distributes some 25,000 titles, keeps hundreds of thousands of volumes in storage, produces an appealing English-language quarterly, Pakn treger (Book Peddler), and is a catalyst for Yiddish renewal all over the country.

Although nowhere near their former quantity, Yiddish publications continue to appear, as may be seen in bibliographies of current books (Baker, 1995/96; Vaisman, 1997; Denman, 1997). There are about 50 Yiddish newspapers and periodicals in the world today, in which the Haredi (ultra orthodox) press plays a prominent role (Yiddish Panorama, 1995, p.29). The New York Yiddish Forverts, a daily newspaper for most of its 100 years, continues to appear on a weekly basis, along with English and Russian editions. Di Tsukunft (New York, 1892-), Yidishe kultur (New York, 1938-), and Afn shvel (New York, 1941-) are long-standing Yiddish cultural periodicals. Several new journals, either in Yiddish, or about Yiddish, have appeared: Di Pen (Oxford, 1994-) is especially noteworthy.

Mam'e loshn groups, leyenkrayzn (reading circles), film festivals, summer camps and programmes, klezmer music ensembles, websites, an active electronic discussion group called "Mendele" and its offshoot, The Mendele Review, are some of the endeavours that have spontaneously arisen over the last few decades and claim enthusiastic supporters.

The Main Sections of This Book

The Catalogue

Section I. Entries in the first section usually bear the LC class mark PJ5129, for Individual Yiddish Literary Authors and works of biography and criticism about them. This section has been placed at the beginning of the Catalogue to mirror the focus of the Collection, about seventy percent of which is comprised of works of Yiddish literature, mostly poetry, by individual authors.

Except for the work of established poets, publishers of Yiddish literature tended to favour the publication of fiction, which was more profitable. Many poets, therefore, had to publish their own books, or did so with the aid of a group of friends, relatives or landslayt (countrymen). When scanning the imprints in the Fishstein Collection, one comes across an occasional tongue-in-cheek variation of the word "alone" (aleyn), or its equivalent, in the spot usually allotted to the publisher: Farlag Aleyn [#1005, 1264-5, 1713], Zikh aleyn [#353], Mir aleyn [#435, 438-9], Aleynenyu [#830-1, 837, 844], Nebekhaleyn [#881, 892]; Eygene or Eygns (close relatives) [#1089, 1298], Landslayt [#614, 1256]; or the wry Koymittsores (with great difficulty) [#1932].

Section II. The next section, Yiddish Literary Collections, lists the various literary collections of the time, which contain both literature and literary criticism—"little magazines" and other periodicals, zamlbikher (miscellanies) and anthologies. The zamlbikher, in particular, made it economically feasible for poets to see their work in print.

Section III. Joe Fishstein's library reflects his interest in other Yiddish endeavours linked to the literary world; these are grouped in Section III of the Catalogue, Related Yiddish Literary Endeavours. They include subjects like the Yiddish theatre, press, humour, folklore, and children's literature. There are a number of unusual works in the Collection on different aspects of the Yiddish theatre, often lavishly illustrated. There are also children's books, some of which have been written by major poets.

Section IV. There was a demand for Yiddish translations of famous works of world literature, as well as of Hebrew literature. These were published both in anthologies and as separate works and are listed in

Introduction

Section IV, Yiddish Translations of Other Literatures. Portraits of many Hebrew and non-Jewish literary authors and other famous personages are included in Joe Fishstein's personal binders and scrapbooks, described later.

Section V. The last section of the Catalogue, Jewish Civilization, groups other areas of Jewish culture. It includes topics such as Judaism and the Bible, Jewish philosophy, history, labour unions, education, music and art.

The Indices

It may be interesting to browse through the Catalogue to get a feeling of its scope. To locate specific names or titles, however, use of the Indices as summarized in the Finding Guide (p.xlvii) is strongly recommended. Access to names and titles has been provided by the Author, Illustrator, Title, Periodical, and Series Indices. The names of editors, translators and affiliated corporate bodies are included in the Author Index. It should be noted that only "distinctive" titles are included in the Title Index; titles that contain non-distinctive titles like Lider (Poems), or Oysgeveylte shriftn (Selected Works) are not listed.

There is no separate subject index, as such, in this Catalogue; access to subjects has been provided by the headings listed in the Table of Contents, which generally reflect the subject analysis offered by the LC classification scheme. If an author or illustrator is the subject of a book, his or her name will generally be found in the Author or Illustrator Index.

Despite the care that has gone into compiling the Indices, they are, unfortunately, not exhaustive. Because of practical limitations and cataloguing rules, they may not include all the authors and illustrators found in general works or in collections, or all the individual titles listed in the complete works of a prolific author. It was also unfeasible to index the many book review clippings Fishstein inserted into his books. The reviews remain in situ, however, and, when present, are mentioned in the note section of an entry.

Attention should be drawn to the presence of two features not usually found in library catalogues of this nature. One is the Illustrator Index, and the other is the Table of Name Equivalents.

Fishstein Collection

The Illustrator Index constitutes a primary source for researchers in both Jewish and general history of illustration in the first part of the twentieth century. Many of the volumes are enhanced by beautiful graphic design, and illustrations by over 400 artists, some of whom were also to make a name for themselves outside the Jewish world. The names of most of these artists can be traced with the help of the Illustrator Index. A footnote to this Index refers the reader to a supplementary list of entries which contain or discuss work of illustrators whose names could not be included in a catalogue entry because of space limitations.

Several authors were also illustrators, like Moshe Leib Halpern [#1360]. Many artists shared a similar background with Yiddish poets, as Benjamin and Barbara Harshav have pointed out in American Yiddish Poetry, and their art often formed striking parallels to the poetry of their colleagues (1986, p.62).

Table of Name Equivalents. This Table provides a list of names in the original Hebrew characters in which Yiddish is actually written, and links those names to their Roman (Latin) alphabet equivalents used in the Author and Illustrator Indices. The indexed Roman alphabet names are generally "authoritative" LC name headings, which have been chosen according to a complex set of hierarchical rules. Since the name headings generally derive from English language reference sources, and seldom reflect the systematic Romanization of the original Yiddish, the Table of Name Equivalents should make the use of the Indices a less frustrating task for Yiddish readers.

Archival Items in the Collection

In addition to the published works described in this Catalogue, there are a number of archival and ephemeral materials in Joe Fishstein's legacy, some of which offer a vivid glimpse of aspects of working-class and middle-class life in the early twentieth century. As such, they form primary sources both for Jewish and non-Jewish early twentieth century historical and sociological research.

A large envelope, of possible interest to historians of the Labour Movement in America, contains memorabilia from Fishstein's years in the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union, including election sheets listing the tally of votes by specialty, e.g., Pleaters, Tuckers, and so on. There are several large, thick albums containing postcards of the time, which were often issued in series. Generally produced in Central or Eastern Europe and the United States, some of these consist of portraits of authors (often studio photographs)—both Jewish and non-Jewish—and other world figures. Some depict sentimental scenes and other subjects popular in the early decades of the twentieth century. There is a scrapbook into which caricatures and other humorous material from Yiddish newspapers have been pasted. Fishstein was also a collector of book reviews and other material which he clipped and inserted into relevant volumes.

Introduction

There are several charming artifacts made by Fishstein in the Collection, including an intriguing wooden plaque dedicated to the klasiker, the "Fathers" of modern Yiddish literature: Mendele Mokher Sefarim, Sholem Aleichem and Isaac Loeb Peretz. It is artfully composed, designed with symbolic material, and adorned with metal buttons and other materials found in the garment trade.

Technical Aspects

Cataloguing Procedures

As in virtually all major research libraries in North America, cataloguing policy at McGill strives to reflect Library of Congress (LC) practice:— in its interpretation of the Anglo-American Cataloguing Rules for descriptive cataloguing, in its procedures for choosing "authoritative" name headings, and in subject analysis—the assignation of subject headings and classification numbers. The transcription of Yiddish into the Roman alphabet also follows LC Romanization practice as much as possible.

The intended audience for the published Fishstein Catalogue is wider than that of the professional library world. The editor's aim, therefore, has been to present a volume that is as clear and readable as possible, with technical discipline present, but unobtrusive.

The Catalogue Entries

Each entry listed in this Catalogue has been derived from a full record on McGill's automated catalogue. To make the listing manageable, and for the sake of clarity and brevity, each record has been reduced to its essential elements. Names of contributors other than the author, which are generally listed at the bottom of the traditional catalogue card, have been omitted; access to them is provided by the Author and Illustrator Indices.

Similarly, LC "uniform titles" and subject headings have not been included. The few uniform titles present in the Fishstein Collection entries were considered dispensable in a published catalogue of this nature. Subject access is provided by the headings into which the main sections of this Catalogue have been divided, which are listed in the Table of Contents. These generally reflect the subject analysis inherent in the LC classification scheme, the order of which, with a few exceptions, is followed in the listing of the entries. Subject access to names has been provided in the Author and Illustrator Indices.

Romanization

Yiddish is written in the Hebrew alphabet, as are Hebrew and Aramaic, and reads from right to left. Since the Roman alphabet is the one used by Library of Congress and most North American research libraries in their computerized cataloguing, a problem arises for libraries with large collections in non-Roman alphabets. Because of important practical considerations, virtually all major research libraries in North America partake in the shared cataloguing provided by the large North American bibliographic utilities, like OCLC (Online Computer Library Center) and RLIN (Research Libraries Information Network). Participating libraries with Hebraica collections are obliged to accept or create cataloguing records which have been Romanized according to the LC scheme. This is also true for contributors to the RLIN database, which has incorporated certain provisions for original Hebrew alphabet transcription.

The Romanization scheme generally implemented in this Catalogue is that of the Library of Congress. The American Library Association /Library of Congress (ALA/LC) Romanization Table follows. The scheme is basically compatible with that of the YIVO Institute of Jewish Research. (Cf. Weinreich, 1949, p.26, and 1968, p.xxi; Weinberg, 1995, p. 60.) The treatment of vowels matches YIVO's, but the table for consonants differs in some respects. For example, in LC, the guttural consonant hes ("h") is differentiated from khof ("kh"), and the zayin-shin is transcribed as "zsh" rather than "zh".

Fig. 2. ALA/LC Romanization Table for Yiddish (Maher, 1987, p.8,9)

In the interest of visual clarity, without sacrificing phonetic accuracy, it was decided to retain one diacritic only in the published version of the Catalogue: the dot under the "h", depicting the guttural hes. The inclusion of this diacritic is essential in the LC scheme, as the guttural hes is represented by the same letter as for the aspirate hey, and must be differentiated from it.

There are many Hebraisms in standard Yiddish—Hebrew words or elements of words that have become embedded in its sister language. These retain their Hebrew spelling (except in Soviet orthography), but are pronounced differently than they are in Sephardi Hebrew. Library of Congress practice has varied through the years with regard to the transcription of Hebraisms. In its concern to approximate reversibility where possible, LC formerly Romanized such words as they would be pronounced in Sephardi Hebrew, rather than in Yiddish. It now accepts the vocalization given by Uriel Weinreich's Modern English-Yiddish, Yiddish-English Dictionary (1968), which is that of the YIVO Romanization scheme, with the substitution of its own Romanized equivalents for consonants. (Maher, 1987, p. 22)

However, this approach is not extended by LC to Hebrew forenames in a Yiddish context. Its policy for the treatment of such a forename is that the name "is romanized according to its Hebrew form rather than attempting to approximate a Yiddish pronunciation" (Maher, 1987, p. 23) (e.g., Mosheh, not Moyshesh). This directive was not followed in the Fishstein Catalogue—one of the few deviations from LC practice to be found in it—as such a practice was considered to be jarring for the Yiddish reader.⁴ For the systematic transcription of a Hebrew forename in standard Yiddish, the cataloguer of this Collection has attempted a compromise; she has tried to convey its Yiddish pronunciation, while suggesting its Hebrew derivation. For example, within the context of standard Yiddish, the Hebrew name, Mosheh, is generally rendered Moyshesh; within a Soviet Yiddish orthography context it is transcribed as Moysh.

⁴For a similar disagreement with LC policy, cf. Weinberg, 1995, p. 70, who also cites the objections of Barry Walfish (University of Toronto) and Zachary Baker (YIVO) in this matter. Weinberg points out as well that there are many examples of RLIN records in which Biblical names are given the Yiddish pronunciation when found in a Yiddish context.

Introduction

Another minor modification of LC Romanization practice has been made in this Catalogue. To minimize ambiguity, an inverted apostrophe has been inserted before the last "e" of certain Romanized words, without which the word might be pronounced differently by an English reader. For example, the Yiddish word for "all"—al'e (alef, lamed, ayin)—without a division mark, might well be pronounced like the word for the alcoholic beverage.

There is no question that a Romanized entry looks alien to the Yiddish reader, especially to the unpractised eye. However, despite the difficulties experienced in the use of a Romanized catalogue, it may nevertheless provide some unexpected benefits. It is helpful to readers who are unfamiliar with the Hebrew alphabet, but can understand spoken Yiddish; or to East European Yiddish readers with a knowledge of the Roman alphabet, whose familiarity with Soviet Yiddish orthography makes standard Yiddish look foreign. In addition, the essence of a Yiddish phrase will often be grasped by those who understand spoken German, provided it contains few Hebraisms.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

We are grateful to the family of the late Joe Fishstein for its generosity in presenting this extraordinary collection to McGill University. It is surely a significant reflection of Joe Fishstein's ideals that the family would not consider selling his library, but insisted that it be housed intact in an institution that valued the Yiddish literary legacy and fostered it in its curriculum.

Special acknowledgement must be made to Dr. Ruth R. Wisse, Professor of Yiddish Literature at McGill at the time, who acquired the Collection for the University. We are also grateful to her for contributing the Preface to this book. Thanks are extended to Alison Cole, who was then Area Librarian for Humanities and Social Sciences, who appreciated the importance of the Collection and was most receptive to giving it a home. Professor Raymond Klibansky recognized the significance of the Fishstein Collection since its acquisition, and we are grateful for his continuing interest and support over the years. I would also like to thank Dr. Hans Möller for suggesting the idea of publishing the Catalogue as a volume in the McGill Fontanus Monograph Series.

Warm thanks are extended to the Jewish Community Foundation of Montreal, whose vision and sponsorship made this undertaking possible. I remember the warm, encouraging reception I had from Emanuel Weiner, who was then Director of the Foundation, when I hesitantly approached him for the first time to inquire about the Foundation's possible support in the cataloguing of the Collection. He and his colleagues not only responded positively but continued their valuable sponsorship later by generously helping to defray many of the costs incurred in preparing the Catalogue for publication.

During the years devoted to the cataloguing of the Collection and its preparation for publication, many people extended their aid, both as staff and as volunteers. Joanna Andrews, Head of Technical Services, has been generous with her time and expertise. Chaya Goldman, who was sessional librarian for a time, ably assisted in the cataloguing process. Adèle Toutant courageously struggled with the task of converting the NOTIS entries to ProCite and then to WordPerfect, and tackled the many ensuing problems as they arose. Penny Aubin was extremely helpful in conscientiously and cheerfully tying up innumerable loose ends that regularly appeared during the arduous process of reviewing the Catalogue entries. Esther Regev had the frustrating task of producing the Table of Name Equivalents in two alphabets — Hebrew and Roman. She carried out this difficult job with patience and ingenuity.

Mrs. M. Antonowych, Anne Glassman, Anna Gonshor, Yetti Kalles, Marsha Lustigman, and Mildred Nathanson contributed their valuable time and skills. I am indebted to the above-mentioned people, as well as to the library support staff of the McGill Cataloguing, Collections, and Rare Book Departments, who have been consistently helpful over the years. The staff at the Montreal Jewish Public Library have also been most accommodating. I sincerely thank them all.

I am particularly grateful to Zachary M. Baker, who, shortly after the Fishstein Collection was unpacked, devoted many of his days off from his job as the Yiddish Librarian at the Montreal Jewish Public Library to examine every book in the Collection and leave helpful comments on slips among the volumes. Later on, he kindly consented to read the draft of the Introduction, and his advice has been astute and helpful.

I would like to thank Professor Eugene Orenstein, who has patiently given of his time, and shared his extensive knowledge of the background to Yiddish literature. Thanks are also extended to Esther Frank and Lonnie Weatherby for reading the Introduction, and to Liba Augenfeld for her verification of the Yiddish headings and the section on the Canadian Yiddish literary scene.

I am indebted to my parents, Max and Clara Kaplansky, aleyem-hasholem, who infused our childhood home with the warmth and joy of Yiddish. I am grateful to my husband, John, for his patient support and helpful advice during the extended period of time devoted to preparing this work, as I am to our children, Ron, Emily and Julie, and their families, for their understanding and encouragement.

FINDING GUIDE

If you are searching for the name of:

- an author¹, editor, translator or corporate body (as contributor or subject): Use Author Index
- an illustrator (as contributor or subject): Use Illustrator Index

(If you can read Yiddish, use the Table of Name Equivalents to link the Hebrew alphabet form of a name with the indexed Roman alphabet form.)

If you are searching for the title of:

- a monograph or collection: Use Title Index
- a periodical: Use Periodical Index
- a series: Use Series Index

¹Since Section I is in classification (call number) sequence, within which literary authors are generally listed alphabetically, it is possible to locate literary authors, followed by works about them, by browsing. A word of caution, however: Call number sequence may be interrupted by the presence of authors' pseudonyms, books that have been bound together, and other factors. A literary author may also have contributed to works listed elsewhere in the Catalogue. It is therefore strongly recommended that the reader use the Indices as a finding guide, as they cover the entire Catalogue.

Fig. 4. Portraits of some Yiddish literary authors, mostly culled from Fishstein's albums. Many are studio portraits taken in the 1920's by B. Lipschutz, of New York. Left to right, top to bottom: Yehoash, Morris Rosenfeld, Judah Steinberg, Abraham Reisen, Jacob Gordin, David Ignatoff, Sholem Aleichem, Mendeley Mokher Sefarim, Isaac Leib Peretz, Hayyim Nahman Bialik, Abraham Liessin, Moshe Leib Halpern, Melech Ravitch, Abraham Sutzkever, H. Leivik, Moishe Nadir, Jacob Glatstein, Zusman Segalowitch, Itzik Manger, Mani Leib, Joseph Rolnick, Joseph Opatoshu, Zisha Landau, Reuben Eisland, Peretz Hirschbein.
